The Housing Leadership Council of San Mateo County and the Housing Endowment and Regional Trust — the HEART of San Mateo County — named Mark Moulton their new executive director.

Moulton is the founding executive director of Living City Partners in Redwood City, where he led the effort to build for-sale, affordable, multi-unit housing for families with low incomes.

Moulton fills the position vacated by Chris Mohr, who held the position for over eight years before relocating to Pennsylvania.

HEART raises funds from public and private sources to meet critical housing needs. The Housing Leadership Council's mission is to increase the supply of homes at all levels.

The two organizations share staff while maintaining separate boards of directors.

"Mr. Moulton combines a deep knowledge of fund development, community outreach and alliance building with a passion for building affordable housing for San Mateo County's young families, workforce and seniors," said Supervisor Rose Jacobs Gibson, who serves as the chair of HEART's board of directors.

Before founding Living City Partners, Moulton served for over 10 years as the founding executive director at Peninsula Habitat for Humanity.
